

Many of you will know that, for many years, I have suffered from multiple sclerosis. In the past year it has become more troublesome, to the extent that I now feel that it is time to give up practice. I will miss our patients, my colleagues, our staff and the practice terribly but I am delighted and reassured that Dr Emma Harding has agreed to take my place from early December 2009.

Thank you for having made my working life so rewarding and enjoyable. I wish Emma, Stuart and each of you, the very best for the future.

Dr Anne Young
